It is with great pleasure that we welcome you to the Second New York Flamenco Festival. There could be no more fitting place to present a festival of flamenco than New York. With its myriad peoples representing more than two hundred years of immigration, New York well reflects the ancient land of Andalucia, the crossroads of so many cultures.

This year's activities include music, dance, film, photography, lectures and culinary events. The central focus of the festival is the dance in all its many forms. We open with Gala de Andalucía, a tribute to the birthplace of flamenco. Embracing tradition and innovation the Gala features El Güito, the legendary master of the soleá, and the fiery Manuela Carrasco, who received critical acclaim for her performances in Flamenco Puro on Broadway. Recent developments in the art of flamenco are represented by Israel Galván who has been called "the Nijinsky of Flamenco," and María Pagés, a leading innovator who returns after her success in last year's festival. City Center was chosen for these major dance events because of its acknowledged reputation as the major showcase for international dance events and because its Moorish style architecture is a perfect complement for flamenco.

The last concert of the festival takes place at Town Hall and features the brilliant young flamenco guitarist Vicente Amigo who recently won a Latin Grammy award. Other events in the festival, such as the U.S. debut of the young singer Marina Heredia, are presented by various institutions including Instituto Cervantes and the Roger Smith Hotel. We have all come together to bring you the very finest of Andalucian culture. We hope that you will celebrate and share with us this powerful art form that evolved from people of such diverse backgrounds.

Robert H. Browning & Miguel Marín

For some time, flamenco has reached far beyond the natural borders of Andalucia to audiences all over the world, thanks to many of the artists who have captivated international audiences with their genuine form of Andalucian expression.

For many, flamenco seemed like an art form that could not be exported. That idea is history and the proof is the enormous success of last year's Flamenco Festival. This year's festival returns with an even stronger program and with the sponsorship of Turismo Andaluz. Flamenco is the most celebrated ambassador of Andalucia and we are strong supporters of its promotion beyond our borders.

I hope that those who have the opportunity to attend the festival will enjoy the great performances of those who represent the essence of flamenco. I wish for those present to feel the emotion of an art form that is an integral part of the culture and history of Andalucia.

There's only one.

a gift from andalucía to the world:

"El Maestro shifted his position and he sat at the edge of his chair. For a reason I could not fathom, the atmosphere was suddenly electrified, as if by a startling pause within the silence. I remember thinking, incongruously it seemed, and in contrast to the unbearable tension, that no domestic animal can sit as still as a wild one.

The old man, still seated, stamped his foot on the ground. His throat contracted as if to stop him, as if he had to force his words out between his teeth. For a second, I feared for him. Then unsolicited, with passion and vitality, he burst into a sole. It was a magnificent song of solitude, deceptively simple and of intense sparseness, the mute stamping of his foot the only accompaniment. His voice was broken and quavering and harsh but grew stronger and carried a deep sincerity... It seemed as though the sound of his voice was accumulating in a confined space, like smoke gradually thickens and after a while makes the air almost suffocating - we were breathless from emotion and the mood of the moment."

Jan Yoors, The Gypsies of Spain

Flamenco - A Gift from Andalucía to the World

What is flamenco? The perennial question attests to both the mystery and power of an art form that has captured the imagination of people throughout the world. As with all art forms that have been passed on orally, the precise origins of the genre are unclear. Such is the case with the parallel tradition in North America, that of the blues; while we know that it originated among Americans of African descent and we can trace rhythmic and melodic elements to West Africa, it is difficult to pinpoint its ancestry. Likewise with flamenco; while we know that it originated in Andalucía (southern Spain) and we can discern elements of Gypsy, Arab and Jewish music in the cante (song), it is impossible to determine its chronological history.

To understand the context of flamenco we need only to glance at the history of Andalucía, the jewel in the crown of Moorish culture for more than six hundred years. Throughout the centuries Andalucía has absorbed people of many different cultures and backgrounds - Phoenicians, Greeks, Romans, Visigoths, Arabs, Jews and Gypsies. All have left their mark on the music, architecture and poetry of the region. For flamenco the most significant arrival was in the 15th century when tribes of nomadic Gypsies settled in southern Spain. Their arrival coincided with Ferdinand and Isabella's conquest of Granada, the last bastion of the Moors, and the subsequent expulsion of Jews and Arabs from Spain. The historian Felix Grande, writing of life in the 15th, 16th and 17th centuries described the harsh conditions from which flamenco developed: "The Jews were massacred, the Gypsies humiliated and persecuted, the Arabs exterminated, the Moriscos (converted Arabs) expelled, and the Andalusians generally exploited. If we do not relate the music to brutality, repression, hunger, fear, menace, inferiority, resistance and secrecy, then we shall not find the reality of cante flamenco. It is a storm of exasperation and grief." It was against this background that flamenco evolved. The first written references to flamenco do not appear until the late 18th century, Jose Cadalso, in his Cartas marruecas (1774) mentions hearing a polo (early form of cante grande - deep song) at a private gathering. Early flamenco was either unaccompanied or accompanied only by palmas (hand clapping) or the tapping of the palo (style stick). These early songs were often laments with lyrics full of pain, suffering and persecution. Such laments include the tonás, of which the most well known form still performed today is the martinete, a cante that was born amongst the Gypsy blacksmiths of Triana. It is often accompanied by the beat of a hammer striking iron in imitation of the blacksmith's anvil. Again we can see parallels in early African American blues and work songs.

While the guitar had long been popular in Andalucía it was not until the mid-nineteenth century that it began to appear as an accompaniment for the cante and not until the latter part of the century was it played as a solo instrument. Prior to 1840 flamenco was essentially a private art performed by amateurs at social gatherings and family affairs or by semi-professionals who traveled between towns and villages and performed for wealthy patrons at festivities and religious feasts. Earnings were usually paltry and artists were subject to the whim of their host. Things began to change however when the cafés cantantes became established in the early 1840s. The next few decades heralded the "Golden Age" of flamenco, though some traditionalists would see it as the beginning of its fall from grace. During this period the unaccompanied tonás began to take second place to songs accompanied by guitar and dance became an important element. New forms were born such as the fandango and alegrías, which, along with the Gypsy bulerías and tangos, are categorized as cante chico (light song). In contrast caña, polo, serrana, seguirilla, soleá and tonás are known as cante jondo or cante grande (profound or deep song). There are also a number of intermediate forms, such as malagueñas and tientos.

It was this period that saw the expansion of flamenco beyond its traditional boundaries. The latter was responsible for bringing flamenco out of the cafés to much larger theater audiences. This unfortunately led to the adulteration of the genre until it was almost unrecognizable among the trappings of "entertainment." In 1922 a group of intellectuals headed by Federico García Lorca formed the "Concurso de cante jondo" in a misguided attempt to restore flamenco to its position of respect. From the 1920s to around 1950 "opera flamenca" (theatrical spectacles) became popular and flamenco was often included in programs by Spanish theater and dance companies touring abroad.

During the 1950s flamenco went through a renaissance with many scholars, both Spanish and foreign, rediscovering the roots of the medium. As has so often been the case with traditional arts throughout Europe it was the marginal class who provided the key to this rich heritage that had been passed on from generation to generation. From the 1950s through the '70s many new masters of the art emerged leading some to call this the "second Golden Age."

While it is the pure unadorned cante jondo that aficionados most embrace, it is the baile (dance) that has captured the imagination of the world. Flamenco dance has attained a popularity unsurpassed by any other traditional dance form with the exception of classical ballet. It is difficult to pinpoint when the dance became an integrated part of the flamenco experience, but it was most certainly at first a solo art performed by women. While today we marvel at elaborate footwork, the early dances consisted of sinuous movements of the body and arms. As men began to dance they introduced the zapateado (heel and toe stamping). This highly percussive male aspect of the dance has become de rigueur among many of today's male dancers and is accentuated by a percussive accompanying guitar style. Originally the dance was a largely improvised discourse between the bailaor/bailaora (dancer) and the tocaor (guitarist) and cantaor (singer); as it developed and incorporated group dances, choreography became an important element.

Flamenco is, by its very nature, a living tradition and for all those who despair that it is a dying art there are others who are excited by new developments in the medium. It is a vivid expression of the human condition and, while the harsh conditions that led to its birth have been somewhat mitigated, it articulates for all of us both the joy and despair of life.

Andalucía has many things to offer and one of the most important is flamenco. The roots of flamenco can be found in a region characterized by its beauty, sunshine and the joy of its people. Thanks to the art of flamenco, people from all over the world are able to enjoy the grace, beauty and general atmosphere one would feel in southern Spain.

In flamenco, the dance is the most attractive and provocative form of expression. Add the singing and guitar playing and witness the magical moments that make this art form unique.

Dance is the main feature of the Gala de Andalucía. One show brings together four performers of the highest caliber. In a certain way, each performer complements the other because each has his or her own style and brings to the stage a special understanding of the discipline. Eduardo Serrano "El Güito" is the classic flamenco dancer. He rigorously keeps within the orthodox lines of genuine flamenco. Manuela Carrasco is an avalanche of Gypsy temperament and is full of the fiery "duende" spirit. María Pagés combines, to perfection, the wisdom of interpretation with an exceptional choreographic talent. Last, but not least, is Israel Galván, the most recent on the flamenco scene, who is the most advanced experimentally and who always surprises his audiences. Of these four different styles, all are excel

Israel Galván, "the Nijinsky of Flamenco", was born in Sevilla in 1973. The son of dancers José Galván and Eugenia De Los Reyes, he started to dance at the age of five and worked with his father during his youth. From 1994 until 1997, he was a member of the Compañía Andaluza de Danza directed by Mario Maya. During this time he worked as first dancer with Mario Maya and Manuela Carrasco. In 1996 he was awarded the Vicente Escudero prize in the Cordoban National Awards, and the First Prize in the 36th Festival of Las Minas (La Unión, Murcia). He has danced in various galas at the Teatro Central of Sevilla, the Teatro Lara of Madrid, and the Gran Teatro de Cordoba and toured around the world. In 1998 he presented his first show, ¡Mira!, at the Bienal de Flamenco and in May 2000 he toured Japan with his own show, Israel Galván y cuatro estrellas. He was named Best Male Dancer of 2000 by Flamenco Hoy magazine. Recently he has collaborated with guitarist Gerardo Nunez.

Manuel Soler, dancer and percussioneer, has been called "the master of flamenco rhythm." By the age of 15 he was a professional dancer and joined the prestigious company of Antonio el Bailarín. In the famed tablaos El Cortijo Guajiro and Los Canasteros he collaborated with the most recognized flamenco dancers of the time, such as Farruco, Rafael el Negro, Mathilde Coral, Manuela Vargas and Manolo Caracol. He participated in the recordings of Paco de Lucía, Camaron de la Isla, Manolo Sanlúcar, Enrique Morente and Carmen Linares and was a member of the Paco de Lucía Sextet for ten years as a dancer and percussionist. Recently he was a guest dancer with the María Pagés company in the show La Tirana and in Israel Galván's show Los Zapatos Rojos.

María Pagés is acknowledged as one of the leading innovators in the development of modern flamenco. Born in Sevilla, she gained international recognition as a principal dancer with the companies of Antonio Gades, Mario Maya and Rafael Aguilar. In 1990 she set up her own company, moving away from interpreting the works of others to exploring and developing her own choreographic ideas. The presentation of De la Luna al Viento at the Teatro de la Maestranza de Sevilla, hailed as a milestone in contemporary flamenco, established her at the forefront of Spanish dance. Since 1995 she has been a featured artist in Bill Whelan's Riverdance, performing throughout Australia, the United Kingdom, the U.S. and Canada. She has also appeared in the films of Carlos Saura (Carmen, El Amor Brujo and Flamenco) and Jose M. Sanchez (La Bella Otero, Hemingway, Fiesta y Murete and Cocodrilli). In 1996 the CAD of Seville commissioned her to create a new work El Perro Andaluz, for which she received the National Award of Choreography. Her many credits also include the flamenco show La Tirana with which she toured the US, Japan and the most important festivals in Europe. In 2000 she appeared on NBC in the Hispanic Heritage Awards ceremony and in 2001 her company was selected as the best flamenco show presented at the Teatro de la Maestranza de Sevilla.

EL PERRO ANDALUZ, BURLERÍAS is inspired by Surrealism and all those that dared to liberate art from its traditional bindings. Filled with force, rhythm, speed and "compás," this innovative work melds different musical styles such as flamenco, tango, rock and ethnic sounds from varied sources with images created by the painters Velazquez and Picasso, and cinematographic references from the impetuous Buñuel. El Perro Andaluz. Burlerías has become a reference point in contemporary flamenco artistic creation since it was performed for the first time in Córdoba in 1996 by the Andalusian Dance Company. María Pagés received the ADE National Award of Choreography for this work, becoming the first woman to be granted this prestigious award.

Manuela Carrasco, revered as "The Empress of Flamenco Dance," is one of the most passionate exponents of Flamenco Puro. Born in the flamenco heartland of Triana (Sevilla) in 1958, she is the most famous member of a family of flamenco artists known as "Los Cordobeses." While still a young girl, she made her professional debut at the famed flamenco club "La Cochera." Soon afterwards she found herself dancing in the Madrid club "Los Canasteros," upon the request of its owner, the legendary singer Manolo Caracol. In 1974 she won the Pastora Imperio prize in Córdoba, followed by the National Dance Prize awarded to her by the Jerez Academy of Flamencology. She received critical acclaim for her performances in Flamenco Puro on Broadway and her appearances in Carlos Saura's films Sevillanas and Flamenco. The Bienal de Flamenco, Spain's most prestigious flamenco festival, has invited her to perform repeatedly since her debut in the festival of 1984. Her own productions include La Diosa and La Raiz del Grito, which toured extensively. She has been painted, photographed and immortalized in diverse media by artists of all nationalities.

The legendary El Güito is one of the few dancers still performing from the golden era of flamenco dance that included Mario Maya, Farruco, and Manolete.

He is a Gypsy from the Rastro neighborhood of Madrid whose mother sold lottery tickets in bars and cafes. He was only four years old when he won a children's talent competition at the Madrid Theater accompanied by guitarist Pepe Motos. He studied at the academies of La Quica and Antonio Marín, and was awarded the Sarah Bernhardt Prize at the Theater of Nations in Paris at the age of 16. He learned from the mastery of Pilar López, who described him as follows in an interview: "He is like the very earth. A force, a root that is so strong it rises to the sky." El Güito specializes in the powerful soleá and has created a distinctive school in it. He was a member of the Trío Madrid with Mario Maya and Carmen Mora and led various companies during his illustrious career. In 1996 he received the Calle de Alcalá Prize which the Festival of Madrid grants to flamenco performers whose career has mainly been related to the city. He has also acted in several films and is the master guide for new generations of flamenco artists.

Antonio Canales, one of Spain's premier dancers, is a native of Sevilla. From a family of flamenco artists, he began his career with the National Ballet of Spain. Soon he was a soloist with the company and went on to become a guest artist of various troupes. He has taken part in many international galas and shared the stage with Rudolf Nureyev, Maya Plisetskaya, Carla Fracci, Vladimir Vasiliev, Fernando Bujones, Peter Schaufuss, Sylvie Guillem, Patrick Dupond, and Julio Bocca, and worked with choreographers such as France's Maguy Marin. In 1992 he founded his own company which debuted with A ti, Carmen Amaya and Siempre Flamenco. Since then Ballet Flamenco has participated in major festivals throughout the world, performing the highly successful Torero, Gitano and other works. Canales also choreographed Grito and A Ciegas for the National Ballet of Spain. Since 1998 he has collaborated on various works, including Bengues, with the stage director Louis Pasqual. In 1995 he received the Premio Nacional de Danza (National Dance Award), Spain's highest honor in dance, and in 1999 he received the Medal of Andalucía, an award given to those artists that have helped to extend the name of their homeland around the world. His extensive credits also include the Oscar-nominated film Montoyas y Tarantos and the recent Tony Gatlif film Vengo.

My desire was to create a performance that would reflect my experience as a bailaor (flamenco dancer) gained over the years. This program is rooted in the historical Sevillian district of Triana.

In Bailaor I try to convey the starkness of flamenco. The stage is a blank canvas on which artists paint their own pictures. As the performance unfolds, each artist will add his or her own stroke of the brush, with powerful emotion, to create a work of art in which the power and the magic of the theater will once more thrill the spectator.

Please allow me to thank my mother, Pastora, for giving birth to the Bailaor.

Eva Yerbabuena, is regarded as one of the most important female dancer / choreographers in flamenco today. Born in 1970, she started to dance at the age of 12 with Enrique "El Canastero", Angustillas "La Mona", Mariquilla and Mario Maya in Granada. She moved to Sevilla in order to study dramatic art with Juan Furest and Jesus Domínguez, and went to La Habana (Cuba) to study choreography with Johanes García. Before creating her own company in 1998, she worked with such noted flamenco dancers as Rafael Aguilar, Javier Latorre, Manolete, Merche Esmeralda, Joaquín Cortés and Javier Barún. In 1997 she was featured in Flamenco Women, a documentary by Mike Figgis. She has toured Europe and Latin America, collaborated with El Güito and Carmen Linares, and shared the bill with Mikhail Baryshnikov. She has achieved international recognition for her appearances at the Bienal and as a guest artist with the National Ballet of Spain. She has received the most important dance awards for flamenco including the Flamenco Hoy prize, the Bienal awards for Best Performance and Best Dancer, and the Premio Nacional de Danza 2001 (National Award of Dance), Spain's highest honor in dance.

Flamenco dance has always been steeped in liturgy and wrapped in a veil of mystery. Only good dancers know how to unveil the mystery of flamenco dance, but they will never do so entirely for then the art would become a soulless routine.

Just dancing for the sake of dancing is not flamenco. It can't work, not in flamenco. Eva Yerbabuena knows this very well because she is aware that every time she dances, she leaves a piece of herself behind. Through the torrent of fever that runs through her body and the inspiration that is born from within, she transforms everything with grace into a language of sovereign beauty.

We will see Eva Yerbabuena perform her most ambitious work ever. In Eva, she performs all of the fundamental rhythmic styles or palos, some of which are the most difficult in flamenco - siguiriyá, soleá, granaina bulerías, and tangos, among others. Eva has said that through these styles she leaves her heart "exposed to life." The music she performs to is full of duende and was created for her by Paco Jarana - a great guitar player who is not only her companion on stage, but also in life.

The work of Eva and Paco, who are always together, is a precious act of love and this will not go unnoticed on stage.

Vicente Amigo has been acclaimed as one of the most brilliant flamenco guitarists of his generation. Born in Guadalcanal (Sevilla) in 1967, he grew up and still resides in Córdoba, where he was given his first Spanish guitar at the age of eight. He started out with the local guitarists Tomate and Merengue, but it was alongside Manolo Sanlúcar, with whom he studied and worked for years, that he began to forge his own name. From a young age he accompanied the flamenco singer El Pele, with whom he recorded Poeta de Esquinas Blancas in 1988. This recording won the 1st Prize at the International Flamenco Guitar Competition and the Bordon Minero First Prize for Guitar at the Las Minas National Song Festival (La Unión, Murcia). The following year he received the Ramon Montoya Prize at the Cordoba National Flamenco Art Competition. More prizes came with his first recording De mi corazón al aire, which won the "Icaro" and "El ojo crítico" awards, as did invitations to share the stage and program with musicians such as John McLaughlin, David Bowie, Al Di Meola, Keith Richards, Bob Dylan, Phil Manzanera, Paco de Lucía, Camarón de la Isla, and Joe Cocker.

Poeta, his composition for solo guitar and orchestra based on a poem by Rafael Alberti, had its premiere with the Orquesta de Cordoba in 1992; it was recorded in 1997 and received the Mejor Autor Flamenco and Mejor Compositor Flamenco prizes by the AIE and the SGAE.

He has also recorded with José Mercé and Remedios Amaya. He has toured extensively and appeared at some of the world's most prestigious festivals in Europe, North Africa, Japan and Brazil. His recording, Ciudad de las ideas, recently received the Latin Grammy award for best flamenco album.
